I was very saddened to learn of Tim's death just today. Over the years, in the 1970's and after, we became friends as we pursued our destinies downtown. I always valued his view of life and insights into the people and institutions that would throw curves at us from time to time, and in these struggles we became firm comrades in commiseration. I believe his injuries made him a sensitive and compassionate human being who could deal with social pretensions without letting them alter his character. He had a good sense of humour and we shared many a fine drink together. I am sorry that we didn't see each other in the past five years and feel my world has been reduced by his departure.

My sympathy to Bonnie and her family.

When I worked on Bay St in the eighties and nineties, I remember seeing Tim walking on Bay St and we would stop and talk for awhile. I was pleased that he was walking (albeit with some difficulty with canes) and much better than I recall at our 5th reunion. He was quite upbeat about his work at the financial firm he was with. We used to joke about how he was always reading The Financial Post and The Globe and Mail at the back of the lecture hall during morning lectures. I was never surprised that Tim went into business and finance.

My condolences to Bonnie and the rest of Tim's family.
