“ Ah, Charlie, a big man with a big heart. I remember watching him always under the hood of his car from across the street, always with a smile and a laugh. I remember the nights with my Dad, my brothers and a few other people enjoying quasi poker in "Al's Beer Garden". I remember Mr. Simpson being there a few times as well.

I remember both he and Gail's enormous support when a fire gutted my parent's house across from them. It was instantaneous, completely genuine and perfectly Gail and Charlie.

Although we didn't have a lot of contact over the past years we have thought about you both many times. Our deepest condolences and thoughts go with you.

“ Although he wasn't a blood relation, he was Uncle Charlie to my brother and I growing up, since he and my dad were best friends and worked together. I always remember him as being more silly, and less reserved than my dad. He would jump into the pool, cannonball style, and given his size, create a tsunami. His favourite saying was "...the crazy thing is..." and I would count how many dozens of times a night he would say it if he was over for family dinner. Attached is a photo of Charlie, Gail, and my parents Fred and Mary rocking 1970s styles before going out for a night on the town. Condolences to Auntie Gail, and their kids Barb, John and their families from Mike, Holly, Abby and Aaron Simpson.

“ To me, he was my Uncle Charlie and a huge part of my life. I have many, many fond memories of times shared together, as the Simpson's and Jesshope's were, and still are, a family and celebrated holidays, birthdays, and every imaginable moment in between together. My Dad and Charlie met back in high school and became instant friends, forming a bond that lasted a lifetime. My brother Mike and I always looked forward to visits with the Jesshope's, and Uncle Charlie's sense of humor & outgoing personality always made us laugh. When we were young, he would play Santa at the annual kids Christmas party where my dad and he worked, and he did it so well that we didn't know it was him for the first few years. As we grew older we shared good times swimming in the backyard pool, BBQ's, and enjoyed weekend visits at the cottage which often included rounds of golf. An avid videographer, he captured so many family memories that are keepsakes that we will hold onto forever. When my parents both passed in 2014, Gail and Charlie became my new born daughter's adopted grandparents, and took her into their hearts unconditionally. Grandpa J. as he is known kept that family tradition going and filled a void that only he could do after my Dad, who would have been proud and honoured. Our love and prayers are with Aunt Gail, Barb & John and their families, and on behalf of all the Simpson's we extend deepest condolences.

- Mark Simpson (Rachel, Caroline, Vivienne & children).
