“ Like Scott Tribe, I only just heard of this sad news. I would check in regularly to read Robin's blog and even though he posted less in recent years, he always did post clips and tributes to his favourite blues artists (Friday Night Blues Blogging). He would also let mutual friends know how his co-blogger, Susan/skdadl was doing in real life on a regular basis. Some of us were a bit concerned that he had closed down his site and hoped it was temporary. This news is so very sad.

My condolences to his family, friends and colleagues. Such a tremendous loss.

“ I just found out from Scott's post that Rob had died. What a loss for us all -- I loved his blog, Peace Order and Good Government Eh, and always appreciated what he had to say about politics and music. My sincere condolences to his family.

“ Just found this out after finding out the death of one of his co-bloggers from his blog POGGE (Susan Kent Davidson) this week, Pogge's blog has been down for 3 months with no explanation. Sadly, I can see why it is. It is only in his passing I finally found out "Pogge"'s real name. On behalf of Progressive Bloggers, where his blog has been a long time affiliate, I offer my condolences.

“ I was shocked to hear about Robins passing. We have worked together for many years on baton related matters and he was always extremely helpful. My thoughts are with his family.

“ I was very saddened to hear of Robins passing. I have worked with Robin for several years through OBTA, working together on competition set systems, tab programs, etc. He was always knowledgeable, conscientious, and helpful in his approach. We will definitely miss both him, and his contributions to our organization. Keeping Robin's family in my thoughts and prayers
