

Mr. Naoise McMullin

July 1, 2013

Naoise McMullin died unexpectedly July 1, 2013. He was an artist, a carpenter and a thinker. An amazing cook, he was a compassionate caregiver for many years to his mother, Eithne. Sharing a similar sense of humour, Naoise and his mother were great friends. Naoise was a sensitive soul and a kind man who deeply cared for his son Janto. He was a kindred spirit of his father Michael who returned to Ireland a number of years ago to farm, study astrology and live out his retirement years. As a young man, Naoise spent time with him in West Cork and it was there that he met Janto's mother, a German national. He never really settled back into life in Canada. His dream was to live either in Ireland or Germany. In the interim he pursued further education in Toronto that included a Bachelor of Arts in political science and post graduate studies in art. While Naoise was not a religious man, he believed, like his father, in his astrological destiny. A creative genius, he was also practical and helpful around the house. He is sadly missed and mourned by his family. Rest in peace, Naoise, we love you.
