One of the things Carolyn said she appreciated the most about Phil was how much he cared about her well-being. He always wanted her to be happy, and considered her preferences when making decisions about things. His deep love was always evident. The girls said they remember their dad for his hospitality, his willingness to take in anyone who needed a place to stay. He had a zest for life and always enjoyed a good joke and good company. He was firmly rooted in serving Jehovah and he cultivated in his children the importance of a good spiritual routine, always making it a priority. He had a kind, generous and forgiving spirit. He loved his children and they always knew it, even at times when discipline was necessary, he had a listening ear and a warm hug to assure them of his affection.
