“ To the brothers of Raymond Quinlan, a delightful man whom I knew for more than half a century.

I got to know Ray very well when we were at law school together, so well, in fact, that he chose me to be his best man when he married. Ray was perhaps the most intelligent and courteous man I have met in 83 years. His career in law was all one could have hoped for until forces beyond his control overwhelmed him. Had his life evolved otherwise, Ray would undoubtedly have been a pillar of the Toronto legal fraternity for decades. The U of T law School might have asked him to teach tax law, as they did Wolfe Goodman when Ray was there.

However, that happy life was not to be. Despite the hardships Ray faced, he never complained, but remained a perfect gentleman, wise, witty and courteous. Ray's troubles have ended. I hope he is smiling in his Heavenly recliner, knowing that people understood that he always did his best with perfect politesse.
