“ When I think of Shirley it's hard not to think of a tragic life devastated by a disability mental illness that robbed her of many but not all of lifes simple joys.

I also think of a childhood memory from many many years ago when a younger and healthier Shirley after having graduated from Nursing school proudly picked up John, Paul and I and took us to the drive-in in her new Volksvagen beetle to see herbie and the love bug. She made 3 young boys very happy on that day and the memory never left me.

“ There are many fond memories of Shirley as she was growing up. She excelled at school, helped her mother and father, always tried to be a good daughter and leaned toward the religious life at an early age. She entered the convent as a teenager but found that it was not the life for her. She went back to school and became a registered nurse. Her desire was to help her fellow man. She worked for the Victorian Order of Nurses in Ontario for a short time and achieved recognition. She helped family members when she could but unfortunately, sickness overcame her goals and she spent some time in hospitals fighting for her health to return. Shirley never married but tried to devote her life to mankind. Her death at age 74 brings to an end her fight to regain her health. Her family respected her decision for privacy as she passed from this life to the next.

“ Sad to see that the good in you was overshadowed by illness. I learned to have an appreciation for you too late in life. May you now find peace and a better afterlife.
